CoT

The instruction asks to determine the most common word in the given text. Output (a) provides a list of words without specifying which one is the most common, whereas Output (b) clearly identifies the most common word as "humans" and provides the frequency of its appearance. Output (b) precisely executes the instruction by providing a single most common word, whereas Output (a) does not.   Therefore, Output (b) is better. ✗